

University

There are over 50,000 subjects you could study at university. You could choose to study a subject that you already study at school or a brand-new subject. You are taught through a mixture of lectures, seminars, and possibly lab sessions if you study a science subject. You are also expected to do much more independent study outside of your contact hours.

Most university students live in halls of accommodation in their first year of study and move into off-campus rented housing in their second and third years – but you can also choose to stay living at home if you live close to your university.

Going to university in England costs £9,250/year* in tuition fees. To cover this, students receive a student loan from the government – as well as tuition fees, you can get a maintenance loan to cover your living costs. There are also scholarships & bursaries available to help students on certain courses or with low income. After you graduate, you start to pay back your student loan once you earn over £25,000 – you pay 9% of anything you earn over this amount, which comes out of your paycheque like a tax.

There are many benefits to going to university. University graduates earn on average £11,500/yr more than non-graduates in the UK. You can also develop valuable transferable skills, gain work experience, and take part in lots of extra-curricular activities like travelling, student societies, and sports clubs.

*Tuition fee loan (full-time students) 2024/25

University

There are over 50,000 subjects you could study at university. You could choose to study a subject that you already study at school or a brand-new subject. You are taught through a mixture of lectures, seminars, and possibly lab sessions if you study a science subject. You are also expected to do much more independent study outside of your contact hours.

Most university students live in halls of accommodation in their first year of study and move into off-campus rented housing in their second and third years – but you can also choose to stay living at home if you live close to your university.

Going to university in England costs £9,250/year* in tuition fees. To cover this, students receive a student loan from the government – as well as tuition fees, you can get a maintenance loan to cover your living costs. There are also scholarships & bursaries available to help students on certain courses or with low income. After you graduate, you start to pay back your student loan once you earn over £25,000 – you pay 9% of anything you earn over this amount, which comes out of your paycheque like a tax.

There are many benefits to going to university. University graduates earn on average £11,500/yr more than non-graduates in the UK. You can also develop valuable transferable skills, gain work experience, and take part in lots of extra-curricular activities like travelling, student societies, and sports clubs.

*Tuition fee loan (full-time students) 2024/25

